LiveTime Learning - Terms of Use

When you attend a live LiveTime Learning programme, there will be participants from your own and other organisations. Please remember therefore when typing any information not to disclose anything confidential, nor divulge information or behave in a way that would reflect badly on you or your organisation.

Brightwave reserves the right to exclude any users who do not conform to these

From time to time in the programme you may be asked your opinion, and/or offered the opportunity to ask questions. Your inputs may be viewed by others during the programme; and may be recorded for subsequent viewing by others not in the programme you've attended.

Brightwave reserves the right not to make the recorded programme available for subsequent review. Brightwave also reserves the right to edit and/or translate the programme for subsequent viewing by you or others. You and your organisation do not have the right to edit the content, or request that it is withheld from subsequent use.

Recorded content will be available to you and others after the live programme. This content is only available for training purposes under the terms of the license, and is not for broadcast or re-sale.

Brightwave is developing moderation and editorial policies for users of the Livewire service.

Brightwave retains information about your usage of the service and your contribution to the programme(s) and is responsible for the security of that data. We can provide information about our Data Protection policy on request.

The content of the programmes isn't complete or definitive statement of the subject, nor is any part of it intended to constitute legal, medical, or other advice for any specific situation. It includes archived information and resources, which may be incorrect or out of date.
